

Which career suits me?

Me, Myself and I and my Career in Academia

TARGET GROUP	Doctoral Researchers
TARGET	The number of students with excellent education exceed the job offers in high-ranking academic positions. Therefore it is helpful to discover your own priorities and talents at an early stage of graduate and postgraduate education in order to develop a congruent self-concept for alternative career paths. Furthermore, in a more complex and unpredictable working environment like the one we are facing, it is important to become more self-reliant.
TOPICS	This training will increase self-awareness and will offer an assessment to learn more about own motives, values, competencies and thus career options and will be a first important step in developing a suitable career. The training will also offer adequate tools for decisions making and self-management to develop a reliable self-concept.
